Submit a copy to NRES Student Services Office*

Preliminary exam for PhD students consist of an oral exam and a written component. The format for the written exam is a set of questions prepared by members of the examining committee that are given to the adviser to administer. A typical format for the oral portion is an oral defense of the student's written responses to questions and an oral exam of the student's general and specific knowledge related to her/his research project.

The student will work with his/her adviser to develop an exam plan that will outline the three content areas for coverage, timing, and format for exam administration. This preliminary exam plan should include deadlines for written exam completion and the date for the oral exam. The plan will also indicate the exam committee chair (someone other than the student's advisor).
